A MONUMENT TO APPOMATTOX CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS.

An enduring monument of marble and granite now stands in our public square which will perpetuate the memory of the soldiers of Appomattox county. We congratulate our people on the signal success achieved; it is a beauty to behold, an inspiration to our young men and an honor to our county. Our town enjoyed the society and presence of our veterans and we are led to believe that no visitor or soldier was neglected in any particular and that our town played the role of host in the best style and our reputation for unbounded hospitality was fully sustained. God bless and keep these old patriots. Speak, silent monumental pile, and tell to generations yet to come of matchless courage, patient endurance, unquestioned devotion, loftiest patriotism, dazzling chivalry, true greatness of soul in the sad hour of defeat as well as in the glad hour of victory.

"MY COUNTRYMEN."

Another monument graces our State square in Richmond and has been erected in honor of Governor Wm. Smith. He is worthy associate of Jackson and other immortals, into whose monumental circle he has now been introduced. The orators of the unveiling ceremonies, Judge Keith and Governor Swanson, told the story of his eventful and useful life in words eloquent and true. He was soldier without fear, statesman without stain on his record, citizen of loftiest patriotism, but he was, above all, a man of the people. In his public addresses, and they were legion, he always won upon his audiences with his opening sentence, "My countrymen" — not "fellow citizens," nor "friends," but "my countrymen," and no one who ever heard him utter the words, and he did it as no other man could, can ever forget how they went straight to the heart and brought speaker and hearer into closest sympathy and touch. No wonder that the people delighted to honor such a man nor that he dedicated the forces of mind and heart to what he conceived to be their highest good. Such a man deserves a place alongside the immortal Stonewall, and from the study of such lives "my countrymen" should gather fresh inspiration in life's work.

Cannot Christendom unite to crush out anarchism? They impudently and unblushingly proclaim their devilish principles from the housetops in every nation, and this should no more be tolerated than that burning torches should be allowed in powder mills. Without the inflammatory harangues there would be no deadly missiles thrown, without the secret conclaves there would be no public violence. A world of law-abiding men should not confess to a weakness that expresses itself in presence of the few who defy the laws of God and man.

If we, "the people," would only learn to live just as the orators of the passing hour tell us we should, what model husbands, fathers, brothers, "sisters, cousins and aunts" we would make. Even Rockefeller, Casaatt, Depew, are experts at moral platitudes, and to follow their advice is never to do any wrong. And what shall we say of the sermons preached by our modern-day statesmen, fresh from graft-ridden Washington? Not as I do, but as I tell you to do.

"Judge Lynch" should be disrocked and retired in disgrace. It is getting to be the old story, "Vice seen too oft we endure and then embrace." Let the monster be throttled before it gets to be master. Public opinion is mightier and can accomplish its destruction. Let it become charged with righteous indignation and pour out its burning, blasting wrath on the growing evil. Lawlessness must be reined or it will ruin.

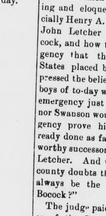
It would be interesting to read what the United States Government has been doing for the Philippine Islands in the recent past and how Cuba has been cleaned up and made healthy, but that while reading of these things we cannot help remembering that in the meantime our American public highways have been shamefully neglected. Untold millions for a canal, but not a mite for the great arteries of transportation in which all the people have an abiding interest.

OUR HEROES HONORED

MONUMENT TO APPOMATTOX CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS UNVEILED.

Beautiful Day—Fine Parade—Great Crowd Present—Speeches by the Governor, Judge Hundley, Congressman Flood and Others.

June the 9th, 1906, was a great day for Appomattox. After a period of 41 years she erects a monument to the memory of her sons who went forth to battle for their liberty, their rights, their homes. Many fell at the front; others were maimed for life or meekly wore their badges of honor in the form of a crutch or an armless sleeve; while others returned to their native county in '65, and at the command of their great General laid down their arms and, with their parole and honorable discharge, went to their homes to make a living for their loved ones. Be it said to the honor of the next generation that they appreciated the work of their sires, and the tangible proof is the stately shaft which was unveiled on our Courthouse square on Saturday.



Some years ago, while the Hon J. C. Jones, a Confederate veteran, was representing our county in the State Legislature, a bill was introduced authorizing our county to appropriate $200 to the erection of a monument to the Confederate soldiers of the county. With the exception of this amount, the money for the monument was raised by the strenuous efforts of Mrs. J. R. Atwood, of West Appomattox. The living veterans and the descendants of those who have passed away should ever hold in the highest esteem the adopted daughter who has showed such reverence for the memory of our fathers. The money was turned over to the Appomattox Camp, C.-V., who appointed Comrades T. J. Stratton, W. H. Abbitt, J. W. Flood, W. T. Johnson and J. Kirk Hannah a committee to have the monument erected.

The day dawned auspiciously. The various committees had perfected all their plans, and promptly at 10:30 the procession was formed in front of the Presbyterian Church under the direction of Chief Marshal R. F. Burke, who had as his aides several our citizens on horseback.

The procession was headed by an excellent band from Lynchburg, followed by a pony-chaise beautifully decorated in Confederate colors, in which were seated the young ladies who were to unveil the monument, viz., Misses Jaqueline and Lynolee Atwood and Misses Eleanor and Frances Abbitt, all granddaughters of Confederate veterans; the Garland Rhodes Camp Confederate Veterans; the Appomattox Camp and many veterans from surrounding counties; the Lynchburg Home Guards, Capt. R. E. Craighill commanding; carriages containing Gov. Swanson, Judge Hundley, Congressman Flood and the other speakers and commissioned officers of the Confederate Army and Daughters of the Confederacy.

The courthouse green and streets surrounding it were densely packed with people representing not only every community of our county, but many from the surrounding counties and Lynchburg.

Captain T. J. Stratton was master of ceremonies. He introduced Veteran J. C. Davidson, pastor of Hebron Baptist Church and chaplain of Appomattox Camp, who led the great gathering in a fervent prayer.

We make the following extract from the admirable report of the Richmond Times-Dispatch:

Judge George J. Hundley, who had been selected by the camp to present the monument to the county, was introduced in a short speech by Mr. J. P. L. Fleshman. Judge Hundley spoke with old-time vim and eloquence, showing that, although his long time on the bench has deprived him of some practice, he is still the old man eloquent.

He opened with a tribute to Appomattox and Virginia. He said Appomattox needs no monument, for it is known of all men that on her soil was fought the last battle and was fired the last gun in the defence of constitutional liberty, and the name Appomattox has a place in history as glorious as was ever written by pen.

NEED NO MONUMENTS.

"Virginians need no monuments to tell how far they went or when they quit. It is sufficient to know, and all men do know, that they came when their country called, they went where their commanders told them to go, and they quit only when they were told by their superior officers to quit."

The Judge's tribute to the old-time statesmen of Virginia was feeling and eloquent, mentioning especially Henry A. Wise, William Smith, John Letcher and Thomas S. Bocock, and how they faced the emergency that the war between the States placed before them. He expressed the belief that "we have some boys of to-day who would face a like emergency just as bravely. Governor Swanson would in a similar emergency prove himself, as he has already done as far as he has gone, a worthy successor of Wise, Smith and Letcher. And who in Appomattox county doubts that Hal Flood will always be the worthy successor to Bocock?"

The judge paid tribute to the valor of the Confederate officers and the brave privates who followed them, and then, in a few more words of eloquence, he, on behalf of the camp, turned the monument over to the keeping of the county.

The four little misses named above pulled the cords, the canvas gracefully and slowly came down, and as the cheers died away Judge Hundley said:

"There is our tribute to valor and heroism. Long may it stand, that the sun each morning may kiss that sacred head and at night the star canopied heavens shed its dew tears upon it to the sacred memory of the brave men it represents."

MR. FLOOD INTRODUCED.

Mr. W. C. Franklin introduced Hon. Hal D. Flood, who, in the name of all the people of Appomattox county, accepted the sacred trust and pledged the men of this and future generations to guard and protect it. Mr. Flood's tribute to the valor of the men who fought in the greatest of wars was a perfect gem, but the young Congressman did not reach his highest and best flights when he came to speak of the women of the South.

The balance of his speech was a plea for the preservation of the ideals proclaimed and set up by the old-time South. He recognized all the benefits and beauties of advanced thought, of science, and all the beneficent results of modern progress, but he hoped the day may never come when we shall cease to cherish or fail to form our practices and conform our lives to the ideals of our old-time Southern civilization, bravery, honesty, reverence for women, love of country, unselfish hospitality and fear of God.

Governor Swanson was introduced by Mr. Samuel L. Ferguson, Commonwealth's attorney for the county.

The Governor was in a most happy frame of mind, and after the applause with which he was greeted had subsided, he proceeded in most genial, almost rollicksome style to get right into the hearts of the old veterans. He said he was told that he was expected to-day to vindicate the Lost Cause. He believed the cause for which the South fought was right, is right and always will be right. The Confederacy fought for the rights of States to govern themselves, fought for the doctrine of local self-government, and that must always be right, and now nowhere on earth is the South condemned for the part she played except by those who condemn anything that does not succeed. Those who condemn the South because she failed are ignorant of history. He cited instances to show this. The Governor expressed the opinion that the time will come, if it has not already come, when the voice of the world will place the name, not on the head of Gen. Grant, but on the brow of the peerless Lee.

Mr. Davis's failure to capture Richmond, the defeat of Pope, the description of the battle of Fredericksburg, the story of the battle of Chancellorsville were most graphically told, and, although the speaking was in the air and before a tremendous crowd, the Governor's graphic and realistic story was listened to with almost bated breath, except now and then the calling of the names of the great heroes brought tumultuous applause. He declared that Lee and Jackson together had never been defeated, and he declared his belief that, had Jackson lived, the South would have won. He said General Lee recognized that, after Jackson's death, he had no general to whose genius he could trust one of those bold flank movements.

The Governor's tribute to the Army of Northern Virginia was grand, and he declared that Virginia can never forget her brave soldiers.

"It is well," he said, "to build monuments to Confederate soldiers. I hope ere long there will be one in every county, but Virginia owes a duty to the veterans still living, and that is to take care of the needy ones, and this old Virginia will certainly do, for no state is worthy of a flag that will not care for the brave men who fought under it."

This sentiment from the Governor was cheered vociferously by the veterans.

The Governor closed his truly grand speech with a glowing tribute to the women of the South.

Congressman Flood announced that Mrs. Joseph Bryan, of Richmond, a devoted Daughter of the Confederacy and president of the Confederate Memorial Literary Society, had sent through Mrs. Thomas S. Bocock, a handsome floral offering, and Miss Burke had been appointed to place the flowers on the monument. Amid cheers she performed the task assigned her.

After the speaking the Home Guards formed in line and fired several volleys as a salute to the Confederate dead.

Chairman Gen. Hugh Smith, of the entertainment committee announced that dinner had been provided for everybody, and he invited the throng to the long tables west of the courthouse. It was a grand dinner, one of the old-fashioned picnic kind. Everybody was fed, and many basketful were left. There is no danger of old Virginia hospitality, one of the ideals Mr. Flood spoke of, being overlooked at Appomattox.

After dinner the Lynchburg Brass Band gave a concert and the audience were well selected and greatly enjoyed.

There was nothing to mar the occasion. Commandant Stratton had as chairmen of the various sub-committees men whose hearts were in the work and who proved themselves ready to do anything they could to render the unveiling a grand success.

Mr. S. L. Ferguson was chairman of the committee on Decoration; Rev. Hugh C. Smith, chairman of Committee on Entertainment; Capt. T. J. Stratton Chairman of Committee on Invitation; and Mr. R. F. Burke Chief-Marshall.

Rev. Hugh Smith, Chairman of Committee on entertainment tried to have at the first table only the militia, the invited guests and the veterans, that together the soldiers might be reminded as much as possible of the "good old war times" and be able to "spin the war yarn." He largely succeeded and they had a good time.

Mr. C. W. Turner and wife of Roanoke, attended the unveiling and remained over at the Pastorium until Monday. They visited the surrender grounds. Mr. Turner noticed that the fence around the cemetery needed painting. He left a contribution for that purpose. We thank him for his thoughtfulness and hope others will by this act of an interested visitor be "provoked to good works.

Maj. George A. Armes, of Washington, owner of the Appomattox battlefield, was attending the unveiling of the monument here Saturday. Major Armes donated to the N. C. Veterans sufficient ground for the erection of monuments and they are now in place. It is said that New York Monument Commission is now considering the proposition to erect handsome monuments on the battlefield.

Among those who came home to witness the unveiling were: Mrs. Annie Bocock, Richmond; Mrs. Davis, Waidsboro; Mrs. Harvey, Lynchburg; Misses Anne and Mattie Caldwell, Mr. and Mrs. Jos.
